

Wisdom in Shakespeare Evening

Exploring the Wisdom in 'Measure for Measure'

28 September 2017, 19:30-22:00

led by Peter Dawkins & Saira Salmon

The Brooke Suite, The Arden Hotel, 44 Waterside, Stratford-upon-Avon, CV37 6BA, England.

In Measure for Measure Shakespeare shows us how mercy and justice in balance are two key aspects of the wisdom and operation of love. In proper measure, these are the measures by which we are measured. Love is tested, as to whether it is true or not. The judge, deputising for the Duke, is tested as to whether he can be both just and merciful. But why the deception? What is attained?

As the great wisdom traditions explain, the wisdom of love creates order and harmony, producing all the laws, rhythms, patterns and forms of the universe. Just as this order and harmony underlies the universe, so something of it underlies each Shakespeare play. Wisdom is in the story; wisdom underlies the story.

These 'Wisdom in Shakespeare' evenings give us the opportunity to explore the various wisdom teachings and traditions utilised by the author Shakespeare in the Shakespeare plays, to see why and how Shakespeare used them and what they can teach us today.

For each evening, Peter Dawkins and Saira Salmon will each provide a short talk or presentation on a particular wisdom tradition which can be found in the play that is being focused on that evening, with examples drawn from the play to illustrate how it is used. We can then look at and discuss not only Shakespeare's use of that wisdom but also what it means or might mean, what it says to each of us, what advice it might give, how and where we might see this played out in our own life experiences and that of others, and how we might use this wisdom and what we've learnt from Shakespeare to improve life generally for ourselves, others and the world.
